

RECORD YOUR VIDEO SCRIPT

Once you have written a video script, it is important to review, rehearse and refine it.

You might have practised reading your script aloud already, but there's no harm in going over it a few times. This is very helpful for improving your delivery and spotting things like repeated words or odd syntax, which are easy to miss when writing and reviewing.

Think carefully about the language and tone you have chosen, and consider if anything could be edited to be clearer or more engaging.

When you have practised and edited your script and you're happy with the final version, have a go at recording the whole thing with a camera or mobile device. If filming isn't possible, just record the audio so you can play it back to see how it sounds.

You might want to have a look at these guidance videos before you get started, or save them for future reference:

- How to film on a mobile device.
- How to set up lighting for videos.
- How to choose a microphone.

Try not to worry about setting everything up perfectly, or doing a perfect take!

The aim of this activity is to give you a chance to practise the process of creating media, which we hope you will find useful in the production of your own online learning materials.